

S. Caught Unprepared by China Crisis, Says Williams

'CONDITIONS IN CHINA NOT IMPROVED'

Government Has Been "Making Pictures" Instead of Seeing Facts, He Declares
"DELAY WAS AVOIDABLE"

Hopeful Sign in President's Taking Charge of Eleventh Hour Preparations

By JAMES T. WILLIAMS, JR.
Editor of Universal Service.
Washington, March 26.—It was the Navy Department which the serious course of events in China caught unprepared today.

When Admiral Williams at Shanghai said a heavy call for loan additional marines they were not to be found at Manila, Guam, Hawaii, or on the Pacific coast.

Consequently, the administration is compelled to draw the new detachment from the marine base at Quantico, Va., and from Atlantic coast navy yards.

It begins to look as if this has been economy, for it failed to provide efficiency in national defense at a critical moment.

It is the worst news in China, the administration has been unable to keep the Philippines of their situation defense force in order to meet the requirements of Admiral Williams.

There is no doubt that the administration has been making pictures instead of seeing facts, and that the delay was avoidable.

SINCE THE FANS CHINA INTO FLAME

Americans Fleeing From Yangtze Valley as Anti-Foreign Feeling Intensifies

Shanghai, March 26 (A.P.)—Americans and other foreigners were fleeing from posts along the Yangtze valley, driven by fear of anti-foreign feeling which the home of the Chinese people has apparently fanned into full flame.

An intimation of the nationalist attitude was given in a statement issued by Chiang Kai-Shek, Chairman of the Nationalist Government, in which he declared that the foreign powers, he declared, could not send troops to war against China to suppress the "passions" of the Chinese people.

Shanghai, with its armed and belligerent internationalist population, offers the most secure place of refuge in Northern China, and it is toward this port that the refugees are flocking.

ASKS FOR DESTROYER
Hankow, Nanking and Chungking are some of the points evacuated or about to be evacuated by the refugees, while the American destroyer USS Greble has gone to take off small groups of refugees from Hankow.

The trouble is not confined to Nationalist territory, for the American Consul at Chungking, on the Yangtze, has requested the dispatch of a destroyer there to take off refugees from the police and Shanghai.

With evacuation of all the remaining refugees from the Yangtze valley, the crisis in that city is apparently over. The Chinese are now in a position to kill and four injured Americans, as far as known.

KILLED BY LOOTERS
Dr. J. E. Williams, American vice-consul of Nanking University, whose death was reported in previous dispatches, was shot by a Cantonese soldier who had just participated in the looting of his home.

Those injured were Miss Anna E. Miller, English housewife, and her daughter, Miss E. Miller, who were shot by a Cantonese soldier who had just participated in the looting of his home.

American women were treated brutally by the Cantonese soldiers, but with the exception of the shooting of Miss Anna E. Miller, no other deaths were reported.

Others were injured, and some were killed, but with the exception of the shooting of Miss Anna E. Miller, no other deaths were reported.

PROTEST FILED BY U. S. LEGATION

By JOHN GOETTE
International News Service
Peking, March 26.—The American legation has instructed Consul Lockhart to file a protest with the Chinese government against the recent attacks upon American lives and property at Nanking by Nationalist soldiers.

American circles here anticipate that Chen will take measures to effect the release of any Americans that may be detained by Nationalist soldiers.

Meanwhile threats of anti-foreign demonstrations from other quarters.

NOW, HAS ANYONE HERE SEEN CASEY?

Hampden, N. H., March 24—New Hampshire's greatest liquor case now pending is an anti-liquor case when Constable William J. Galloway issued a warrant for the arrest of P. S. Casey on charges of illegal sale and transportation.

Police charge that a week ago he went to Springfield and purchased five cases of whiskey at $50 a case. The hauler returned here with it for the money. Casey gave the hauler a check on a Rochester bank, police say. The bank was closed when the hauler went to cash it and he returned to the precinct demanding cash. Casey showed up the day after the money was paid, but the police. He left town. But before he left he left a lot of things. The police finally secured the case of police. They investigated and recovered the case in Somersworth.

Casey was arrested and arrested by Constable Lennett. The latter was a former inmate of Superior Court. All three people guilty today of aiding in the transportation from Boston. They will testify against Casey in the court, police said.

In the meantime, while a Boston lawyer receives the case of $500, the county marshal has the case, but the case, but nobody can get claim to Casey.

"FLY!" he said to his kite —REM said it to his cough

An "outdoors" boy is Will Habighorst. The sort of boy who never worries about the weather. One day he came home with a cough that wasn't much fun—but a bottle of REM soon sent it flying. REM did such a quick job for him that mother and father too have used it when they got coughs. Mrs. Fred Habighorst of 204 Cherokee St., St. Louis, will tell you about it:

"Our son Will is a regular out-of-doors boy and is out in all sorts of weather. After school, he's always out playing one game or another. Last winter he got a cough and we bought him a bottle of REM at Schroeter's at 7th & Wyoming, and it got him well very quickly.

"It did the same for my husband when he got a cough, and later on for me too. Naturally we think a great deal of REM. Every time we used it last winter it relieved our coughs real quickly."

So many who have tried REM speak of the quick relief it brings. This quick action is largely due to a special ingredient in REM—effective, harmless—that is not found in ordinary cough syrups. Clinging to your throat as it is swallowed, REM spreads a soothing, healing film over the inflamed and irritated membranes.

No Opiates in REM. And it is pleasant to take.

Ask your druggist for REM—the dark blue package with the large orange circle. If it doesn't help you, you can have your money back. Fair enough!

BOMBAY SAVANT HITS 'MISSIONARIES' MISSIONARIES'

Foreign Policy Association Is Told by Prof. Joshi What's Wrong in China

Attracted by the brightness of the sun, in view of developments in China, the Boston Branch Foreign Policy Association turned out on mass at the ninth hundredth anniversary of the mission in the City of Peking yesterday.

The subject was, "Are Missionaries International Meddlers?" Speaker who directed the topic was Dr. Edward H. Hume, president of the Foreign Policy Association, and Prof. Joshi, formerly senior professor of English in the University of Bombay, and now exchange professor of English in the University of Peking. Dr. Hume defended the missionary movement. Prof. Joshi, on the other hand, deprecated its value as carried on today.

Dr. Hume continued missionary effort and developed educational, philanthropic and other agencies for social advancement in China. Professor Joshi said "For more than twenty years a group of Western missionaries have been interested in the project of converting the 'heathen' of the Eastern World through the instrumentality of a social mission."

Two kinds of missionaries. "Missionary workers may be divided into two groups: Constructive missionaries and adventive missionaries, and, unfortunately, the majority of missionaries in China are of the latter type. They are interested in the project of converting the 'heathen' of the Eastern World through the instrumentality of a social mission."

WHAT CHINA WANTS
"I will not deny that the Christian missionaries have made some contribution to our welfare in stimulating certain Christian activities, but they have always contributed to the disadvantage of the Chinese people. The trouble is that just as the Christian nations have been sending out discarded clothing to clothe the naked heathen, so have they also, recently, been sending their discarded theologians."

WILLIAM J. PORTER
BURIED TOMORROW
Federal Commissioner for William J. Porter, former auditor of the Boston School Committee and president of the House for the Boston Catholic Children, will be held tomorrow at St. Peter's Church, Grove Hall.

FASCINATING YOUNG WIDOW SHY ADMISSION

Romance Steals Second Time Into Life of Former Gloria Morgan

EXPECT QUIET WEDDING

Mrs. Reggie Vanderbilt to Announce Engagement to Prince Godfrey Langenbourg Soon

Princess Marie, 26—There have been rumors and rumors—old ones—but not until today that beautiful Gloria Vanderbilt, 26, who will be married again, this time to royalty.

It is Prince Godfrey Langenbourg, nephew of Queen Marie, and the fascinating young widow of the late Reggie Vanderbilt, who will shortly make an announcement of her engagement to the prince.

Gloria Vanderbilt, 26, in her new home, the young widow, who would remain unmarried for long, but their association as to Reggie's private affairs ended in kind since last January.

Then came a vague report that Gloria, taking a vacation on the coast, had been seen much with Prince Godfrey and that the latter made a life of his own. It was then that the two were seen together, and the engagement was made.

TO PLAY AROUND CASTLES.

All this speculation ended today, however, with Gloria's shy admission, and little Gloria Vanderbilt, now nearly three years old, will have a new father and will be able to play around castles and everything else just four years after her marriage to Reggie Vanderbilt.

It was during her life that she had in September, 1923, and the estate was liquidated out and the financial wrinkles removed. It was discovered that the young widow was married when she was only sixteen and had received less than $100,000 from the estate.

Of this total, $100,000 was from the sale of Vanderbilt's Island, Sandy Point farm in Portsmouth, N. H., a credit of $100,000 was added to her name in lieu of her dower in the farm when she was sold to Miss Taylor.

BECAME HEIRESS.

Little Gloria, the baby, became heiress to a trust fund of $200,000, but her father had no right to touch, but this money could not be used for her education.

It was the practical business left for her, in which Gloria was left a widow at the age of twenty, and Reggie immediately to predictions that she would be a social success.

Mrs. Leonobel Jacobs.

American artist, back from China. She is wearing a Chinese dress, and is of 18 which she brought over from China with her. It is of yellow, embroidered with gold thread. She uses it for a nightgown. Portraits in the background, painted by her, are: "The Fifth Princess," member of the de-throned imperial family; left, the Princess's father-in-law.

Mrs. Leonobel Jacobs, American Artist, Back From 3 1/2 Years in Far Country

By KATHERINE HERRICK

To live in China, knowing that a little of the language, was not without its perils. You simply draw what you want to say.

This was the method of Leonobel Jacobs, American artist, who is back from three and one-half years passed in the Celestial Empire.

CAMPAIGN OF SAFETY WILL OPEN APRIL 4

Auto Organizations and Police Outline Plans for "Team Play"

Auto organizations and police will cooperate in a campaign of safety which will open on April 4, according to plans outlined today by the Massachusetts Automobile Association and the Boston Police Department.

The campaign, which will be known as "Team Play," is a joint effort of the Massachusetts Automobile Association, the Boston Police Department, and the Massachusetts State Police. It is designed to reduce the number of accidents and fatalities on the roads.

The campaign will include a series of lectures, demonstrations, and other activities. It will also include a "Team Play" contest, in which teams of drivers and police officers will compete to see who can drive the safest.

Home Beautiful Show at Mechanics Hall Breaks Record

The Typical, Charming American Home---"A Thing of Beauty and a Joy Forever!"

THE CAPE COD COTTAGE TYPE—delighting discovery of artists summering on the velvet sands—is in favor everywhere as an inviting suburban home. This cottage is modified in the Colonial motif, with the chimney especially interesting.

THE TRUE COLONIAL TYPE—definitely maintaining the New England tradition of dignity by means of its entrance pillars—is adapted to low cost with exquisite results.

THE DUTCH COLONIAL TYPE—an ever contemporary popular type—New England's Dutch Colonial house, with a dash of foreign flavor. The gambrel roof is the distinctive characteristic.

EXPOSITION IS A MARVEL IN INTEREST AND NOVELTY

Crowds Swarm to Opening; Big Features Are Displays of Furniture, Furnishings, Equipment; Style Shows.

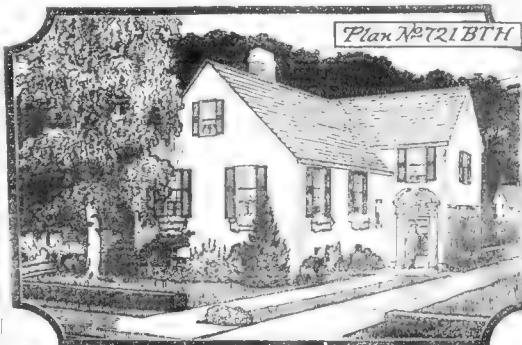

WITH a much finer and more complete array of variety than any home show ever before, the seventh annual Home Beautiful Exposition opened yesterday for the annual display of the most interesting and profitable of all the city's attractions. The exposition, which is held in Mechanics Hall, is a record-breaking affair, and is expected to attract a large number of visitors.

Vacuum Cleaner Dance Partner for Housewife

THE vacuum cleaner and a dance partner for the housewife. The vacuum cleaner is a new and improved model, and is a very useful and convenient appliance for the home.

Three Floor Levels in This Fine Home

FLOOR PLANNING of this attractive design is a fine example of the art of the architect. The plan shows a three-story house with a gambrel roof, a large front porch, and a small rear porch. The interior is divided into several rooms, including a living room, dining room, kitchen, and bedrooms.

METAL LATH AND PLASTER BOARD BEST

Tests have been made by the U. S. Department of Commerce, and the results show that metal lath and plaster board is the best material for use in the construction of walls and ceilings. It is strong, durable, and easy to work with.

STUC-O-TINT FOR TEXTURE

PLASTER REINFORCED WITH STEEL

Good Plastering Increases Building Values
Metal lath is the only plaster base that makes this certain. It reinforces the plaster and does not shrink, swell or warp, assuring beautiful walls and ceilings and reducing depreciation. Your contractor knows the advantages. Ask him for alternate figures. The low cost will please you. We, too, will be glad to give you free, authoritative information. Write us, The National Council for Better Plastering ARCHITECTS EXHIBIT CORP.

BETTER PLASTERING ON METAL LATH

UNUSUAL FLOOR DESIGN YIELDS HOUSE OF CHARM

Construction Plan Interesting in its Deft Adaptation of Floor Levels. Giving Interest to Exterior of House.

The house is a charming example of the art of the architect. It features an unusual floor design that gives it a unique character. The exterior is also very attractive, with a gambrel roof and a small porch.

CO-OPERATIVES HELP PROSPECTIVE OWNERS PORCH SHOULD FIT HOUSE AS UNIT PART
The co-operatives are helping prospective owners by providing them with information about the different types of houses available. The porch should fit the house as a unit part, and not as an afterthought.

DINING ALCOVE MAY REPLACE LARGE ROOM
The dining alcove is a new and popular feature in modern homes. It provides a quiet place for dining and is a great space-saver.

Built-in Furniture
Built-in furniture is a great way to save space and add to the charm of a home. It includes built-in bookshelves, cabinets, and seating.

SAFEKOTE SHINGLES

will safeguard your

NOT for a season or two—but year after year, constantly. Through the gales, sleet and snow of winter—the driving rains of spring and fall—the blistering heat of summer. Sparks from chimneys cannot harm them. Here are the finest shingles of their kind in all the world. Beautiful in the natural colors that were fixed thousands of years ago in the crushed slate with which they are surfaced. Tough, impenetrable, lasting shingles—as only the best materials and skillful manufacture can make them. Safekote Slate-surfaced Asphalt Shingles will save you money too. They are surprisingly low in cost. They are easily and inexpensively applied. They are now available in practically every New England community. See your nearby dealer—or write direct to us for details and samples of the items listed below. Safekote Mills, Box 622, Millis, Mass.

Choose the style or color you like best—"300 to 1" Individuals, Standard Individuals, "3 in 1" Giant Strips, "4 in 1" Standard Strips and "10" and "12" Hexagonal Strips, in red, green, blue-black or the unusually attractive "Colonial". Ask also to see the Safekote Seven Ply and other Building and Sheathing Papers.

Rented Apartments Help Many Families to Home Ownership

THREE-FAMILY RESIDENCES FOR THRIFTY NEWLYWEDS

More Than One-Family House Recommended for Rental Income—Desires of the Buyer and Ability to Pay Carrying Charges Should Decide Home Choice

By JOHN P. HENNAN
Real Estate Editor

What type of home should one buy with average means? The answer is, of course, a one, two or three-family house. The advantage of this type of home is that it gives the owner a rental income, and the ability to pay carrying charges on real estate property in the community. A house with a rental income is a good investment, and a house with the ability to pay carrying charges is a good investment.

JOHN P. HENNAN
Real Estate Editor

It is a common belief that a house with a rental income is a good investment, and a house with the ability to pay carrying charges is a good investment. This is not always true. A house with a rental income may be a good investment, but a house with the ability to pay carrying charges may not be. The owner must consider the desires of the buyer and the ability to pay carrying charges before making a choice.

What type of home should one buy with average means? The answer is, of course, a one, two or three-family house. The advantage of this type of home is that it gives the owner a rental income, and the ability to pay carrying charges on real estate property in the community.

Amazing Growth of Park Square Shows Realty Opportunities

HOW PARK SQUARE appeared more than fifty years ago when land was sold at a dollar a square foot and the backyard gardens of Boylston Street tenement, occupied part of this valuable location. Photo, loaned by the Boston Real Estate Exchange, shows the square looking from Boston Common at Boylston Street.

PHOTO SHOWS how the growth of the city has changed the square. The tree, looking from Boylston Street, is the same tree that was there in 1860. The square is now a valuable location for real estate.

More and More Homes With Transportation, Will Come for Boston

AS increased rapid transit facilities bring the "garden" suburbs of Boston nearer, more and more land is being devoted to homes.

A man returning to Boston today, after an absence of five years, would be amazed to see how much land formerly vacant, now is occupied by colonies of new homes.

The "little towns" on the fringe of the metropolitan city are growing up. Tremendous population gains and thriving business centers, expanding right before our eyes, show that.

Most desirable tracts near the city proper already have been used up for homes.

Coming around in a circle through Malden, Medford, Somerville, Arlington, Belmont, Watertown, Newton—this chance is evident.

House builders in Greater Boston this Spring are extending their operations further beyond the older edges of Greater Boston and in the years to come they will continue to do so.

Our own amusement would be great if we could visualize now, the Greater Boston of the future, with homes far up and down the North and South Shores and extending toward the center of the State, linked to the city by high-speed travel facilities.

THE BATTLE OF THE MARNE How Von Kluck's Army Led Into a Pocket

Over Night the Complexion of Battle Changed and the Kaiser's Onrushing Invaders Were Forced to a General Retreat

MARSHAL JOFFRE'S

NARRATIVE of the Battle of the Marne, as told to Bernard Desouches, official liaison officer between the French Army and the American Air Service in France.

Revised After Translation by Major Desmazes,
Chief of the Marshal's Personal Staff.

CHAPTER II.

THE Battle of the Marne was not only a giant conflict of great armies, but also a significant struggle between two methods of command.

The military method practised by the French side had been inspired by the teachings of Napoleon. His doctrine calls upon the commander-in-chief to direct the battle from beginning to end. It is he who co-ordinates activities, guides every initiative, and endeavors to secure all possible advantages. There is no insistence upon mechanically following preconceived plan which the enemy's superior resources render ineffective.

In the German camp, a quite different doctrine was being followed. It had been bequeathed to the armies of the Empire by old Marshal von Moltke. The victor of the Battles of Sadowa and Sedan taught that the actual direction of a battle falls principally upon the subordinate command. The commander-in-chief, after having drawn the general plan of battle, makes way for the initiative of his army commands.

This method succeeded against Austria in 1866 against France in 1870, because in those two campaigns, it founded the German Empire, the Prussian forces were fronted by inert armies led by feeble commanders.

"Spirited Disregard of Orders"

In 1914, however, von Moltke's doctrine resulted in failure. In the preliminary phases leading up to the Battle of the Marne, the German Supreme Command had submitted to the ascendancy of its army commanders, accepting their rash-est actions. The German commander-in-chief had not endeavored to correct his subordinates' most flagrant mistakes, nor did he take notice of their spirited disregard of his orders.

It is a German general who said: "A battle is not only an act of force, but also a conflict of wills." It is, in addition, a conflict of intelligences.

We have already seen how between August 25th and September 5th the situations of the German and Allied armies were reversed. After destroying the Belgian frontier fortresses Liege and Namur, and the French-intrenched camp of Maubeuge, the German armies had begun a grand encircling movement like the sweep of a gigantic scythe that was intended to encompass the French capital, Paris. But on the eve of the Battle of the Marne they found themselves inside a curve described by the Allied armies. The eastern extremity of this curve abutted on the fortress of Verdun, and the western end on the entrenched camp of Paris.

The Germans swung too far toward the centre of the Allies' encircling line, and failed to cover the right flank.
It was against this flank that I had massed General Man-nour's army. And it was here that the Battle of the Marne really began.

"Von Kluck's Repeated Disobedience"

Now the Germans owed the dangerous situation of their right to three primary causes.

FIRST: The failure of the German intelligence service to reveal in time to General von Moltke the menace which was developing on his right in the form of the newly created Sixth French Army under General Maunoury.

SECOND: The serious mistake of the German Supreme Command in particularly weakening the armies of its right to strengthen a secondary and more remote theatre of war.
(Two army corps had been sent to the Russian front).

THIRD: The repeated disobedience of Von Kluck had transformed the offensive arrangement prescribed by von Moltke to take effect on September 2d into a defensive arrangement which could not meet the requirements of the situation in view of the force and ferocity of the French counter attack.

Thus the position of the two weights of the military balance had been radically changed. The weight of the Allies had been increased at the vital point, while that of the Germans had been lightened. The equilibrium had been gradually displaced to our decided advantage.

Besides those favorable conditions already described, under which the Allies were about to begin the Battle of the Marne, there was to be added another, the most essential—SURPRISE!

The battle began on September 5th with a surprise attack upon Von Kluck's army, after the long retreat of the allies.
The German right flank was then unexpectedly attacked by Mannour's troops. The forces of the Sixth French Army

ALLIED COMMANDERS AT HISTORIC MEETING

ON the day the Battle of the Marne began, Marshal Joffre revealed to the British Field Marshal, Sir John French, at the latter's headquarters near Melun, and appealed to him to co-operate to the fullest extent with the British forces in the impending battle, the plans of which he outlined. Joffre could not speak French nor could French

This is easy to understand. In this battle—a million in this battle—a million of men—and the menacity of the battle itself—the big figures concentrated at certain points, leaving the battle itself. In fact, it is because the French command, inspired by the example of the great Napoleon, seized every advantage the course of battle offered that the victory was won by them instead of by the enemy.

However, this does not mean that when the battle has once begun the commander-in-chief has only to await the result, like one who waits for a series of figures. In this battle the figures were changed and shifted and the big figures concentrated at certain points, leaving the battle itself. In fact, it is because the French command, inspired by the example of the great Napoleon, seized every advantage the course of

by the enemy.

The Allied armies had carried out as well as they could the movements leading up to the Battle of the Marne. Their great retreat before the prepared avalanche of German troops had been skilfully executed. The Fifth Army of Lanrezac had released itself from Von Bulow's enslaught. The British, who were on Lanrezac's left and had retreated faster, following skilfully every step of the way, had finally reached the Seine below Paris. And Mannoury's army, transferred partly in haste, round Paris to turn the flank of Von Kluck's German army, reached the northeast sector of Paris in the evening of September 2d.

Joffre's Historic Battle Order

Here it was preparing to receive the enemy's attack when, to its great surprise, the columns of Von Kluck's army neglected the capital city and deviated to the left or southeast, instead of to the right or southwest, as the German General Staff had intended.

It was on September 4th, when the movement of the German right (General Von Kluck) had become extremely ap-

A STRIKING portrait of Marshal Joffre, who com-

The Way to Victory

HUNDREDS OF THOUSANDS of soldiers in a death grapple, with Paris as the stake and the outcome of the newly-begun World War hanging in the balance—this is the background against which Marshal Joffre today reveals in detail his strategies as commander-in-chief that won the great victory of the Marne and hurled back the German invaders from the gates of the French capital. In the second installment of Marshal Joffre's thrilling narrative, heretof, the inside story of those historic September days in 1914 is unfolded with dramatic intensity.

In last Sunday's initial installment Marshal Joffre told how the onrushing Germans swept southward like a monster scythe toward Paris, how Von Kluck's First Army drove headlong in advance of the other armies on the German right wing, which were all being led into the trap Joffre was preparing, and how the Germans suddenly realized with astonishment and dismay what was happening. In today's installment Marshal Joffre carries his narrative through the main Battle of the Marne to its victorious climax.

JOFFRE CREDITS 'SURPRISE' AS BIG FACTOR IN VICTORY

Map Prepared for Hearst Papers by French Army Staff Shows How the Germans Were Hurlled Back

THIS map, revised by Major Desmazes, chief of Marshal Joffre's personal staff, shows the changed complexion of the battlefield after Joffre gave the order for general attack by the Allies on September 4. The diagrams with their detailed explanations show how the German armies were driven back northward, with the French and British opening a wide gap between the First and Second German armies of Von Kluck and Bulow. Von Kluck, who had been drawn into a trap when he rushed across the Marne, found his army in a critical position. With his forces spread out almost east to west, advancing south, he found himself suddenly compelled to swing his whole army around on a line north to south to try to check the encircling movement of General Maunoury, which threatened his right flank. General Joffre's strategy forced a general retreat of all the German armies to shorten their battle lines and protect their right wing from annihilation.

Von Kluck Suddenly Saw Danger From Mad Rush to Reach the Seine

In obedience to the instructions received from the British Government, had endeavored to give his forces time to re-constitute themselves even at the expense of not maintaining a uniform front with the French Army. It had been necessary, following the ideas of the French Government, for Lord Kitchener to intervene personally so that the British commander-in-chief would not at all hazards keep his brave army in line.

It was only natural, therefore, for one to ask on the evening of the 4th if Marshal French, already sounded on this question by the Governor of Paris, would consent to change from the defensive retreat to an attack with all his strength alongside the French armies.

The question was a serious one. The British Regular Army had suffered terrible losses in the six-day battle in which it had slowly retreated sixty to eighty miles, but fighting every step of the way, and always with face to the advancing avalanche of the enemy. I had no authority over the British commander-in-chief except that which he was himself willing to recognize. If the British continued to fall back it meant that the fighting line of the Allies, which had been reconstituted with so much difficulty, would again be broken. And this time a fracture might be fatal to our entire battlefront.

To banish all doubt, I personally called upon Marshal French on September 5 in early afternoon. I found him at the Chateau de Vaux-de-Peul near Melun. I did not understand English and the British Marshal did not speak French. General Wilson of the British staff acted as interpreter.

"Von Kluck's Change of Front"

I showed the British commander-in-chief the position of my armies which were about to begin the battle upon which depended the outcome of the war. I explained that it would never be understood how the British Army could be present without taking a great part in so decisive a struggle. I appealed to British honor, knowing that it is never appealed to in vain.

Marshal French listened to my words in silence. When Wilson translated my moving appeal to him, he replied simply: "I will do all I possibly can."

The battle began on the afternoon of September 5. At the western extremity of the immense line of battle, the Sixth French Army encountered the Fourth German Reserve Corps, which made up Von Kluck's extreme right. The two forces met between the Oureq and the Marne, about four miles north of Meaux. The Germans were immediately thrown back beyond the Therouanne River, which is one of the northern tributaries of the Marne.

General Von Kluck was now thoroughly aware of the danger facing the German armies as a result of his mad rush to reach the Seine. With a resolution that spoke highly of his confidence in his troops and of the technical skill of his staff, he decided upon a rapid change of front. He ordered his 2nd and 4th Army Corps, which were in a position to intervene in the shortest possible time, to proceed by forced marches to the north of the Marne. His object was to lengthen the right of the 4th Reserve Corps, and turn the flank of the French who had just overpowered his troops in the north.

General Von Kluck believed he could execute this preliminary maneuver without calling upon the two army corps composing his left. These, on the morning of the 6th, while facing southward, had come into co-operation with Von Bulow's right, which at this moment was engaged by the right of Franchet d'Esperey's 5th Army and the left of Foch's 9th Army.

At the same time, the German 4th and 5th Armies, under the command of the Prince of Wurttemberg and the Imperial Crown Prince respectively, were attacked by Langle's 4th French Army and Sarrail's 3rd French Army. As to the 3rd German Army of Von Hansen, it received two simultaneous calls for help. General Von Bulow requested it to support his left, and the Prince of Wurttemberg demanded assistance for his right.

Von Hansen, had had since the beginning of the campaign the hard task, besides fighting and advancing on his own front, of responding to repeated calls for aid from the German armies on both his wings. He now divided his strongest forces, hurling one to the assistance of Von Bulow, east of the marshes of St. Gond, and with the other supported Wurttemberg's right to the east of Vitry-le-Francois. (See map.)

On September 7th the fighting became terrific on a battle front nearly 200 miles in length. In the west (northeast of Paris) Von Kluck had found Maunoury a stronger adversary than he had expected. He therefore ordered the two army corps of his left north of the Marne in the direction of the River Oureq. Their departure immediately uncovered the right of Von Bulow's 2nd Army.

Thus an enormous gap was created in the German right. While Von Bulow's 2nd Army was fighting south of the Marne with its front facing south, Von Kluck's 1st Army was fighting north of the Marne with its front facing west. The open space between these two armies was occupied only by the thin line of Von der Marwitz's corps of cavalry.

The British Army and the left of d'Esperey's 5th Army pushed back this fragile barrier on the night of September 6th, advancing to the River Grand Morin, one of the southern tributaries of the Marne. On September 7th they crossed the river and threatened to outflank the 2nd German Army of Von Bulow on its right. (See map.)

This menace to his flank forced Von Bulow to draw back his right wing in a defensive hook. An advantage gained in the meantime by Von Kluck over Maunoury, whose left was compelled to draw back despite its reinforcement by an army corps which I had sent, did not fully compensate for the ever-increasing danger facing Von Bulow.

On September 8th, the action entered its decisive phase. To the west, Von Kluck had totally evacuated the territory south of the Marne, completely separating himself from Von Bulow. He was now fully engaged with his counter-attack against Maunoury.

The Germans paid dearly for the definite separation of their 1st and 2nd Armies. In the area between these two armies there had begun the victorious advance of the British and the main body of d'Esperey's fifth army. On the 8th these allied forces reached the plateau between the river Petit Morin and the Marne. The Petit Morin is another of the tributaries of the Marne, situated north of the Grand Morin. (See map.)

"Victory Was Approaching"

General Von Bulow on the morning of the 8th gave up all hope of receiving any aid on his right from Von Kluck. The latter, heedless of the general issue, was conducting an isolated action, fighting desperately north of the Marne and slowly retreating toward the northwest.

The commander of the Second German Army, Von Bulow, endeavored to right the situation with a daring action. He hurried his centre and left, which was supported by the right wing of Von Hansen's 3rd Army, against Foch's 9th Army. Foch's right and centre were slowly forced back to the south of the marshes of St. Gond.

It was a brilliant effort of Von Bulow, executed with great skill, but it failed to achieve its objective. He was unable to weaken the magnificent resolution of General Foch, whose perspective was not limited to his own battle field. Foch contemplated the situation as a whole and in its true light. That evening he telegraphed to the commander-in-chief: "Situation excellent."

Farther to the east the 4th and 5th German Armies had not been able to gain any marked advantage over Langle's 4th Army and Sarrail's 3rd Army. Both were actively engaged on the whole line and hard pressed. The happy addition of two army corps to our forces in the east, one between the French 3rd and 4th Armies and the other on the 4th Army's (Langle's) left, resulted in strengthening two weak points in our fighting line.

It was on the evening of September 8th that I felt the victory approaching. I sent instructions to the armies of my left and center which were to guide their maneuvers while Maunoury was coping with Von Kluck. Marshal Foch I requested to cross the Marne as soon as possible so as to threaten the rear of Von Kluck's 1st Army. At the same time d'Esperey, giving a hand to the British, was to push forward with the left of his 5th Army, going straight north to beyond the Marne. With his right he was to support Foch, helping him to re-establish his position. (See map.)

As one can see, under the influence of circumstances, I again radically modified my plan. We had begun the battle with an operation intended to turn the flank or encircle and destroy the German right. But the movement which Von Kluck, commanding the German right, executed in throwing all his forces against Maunoury had opened a gaping breach between the 1st and 2d German Armies—fatal to both if we could take advantage of it. It was into this opening that I then endeavored quickly to push the British army and the left of d'Esperey's 5th Army. Both commanders and their nearly exhausted armies responded magnificently to this auspicious situation, every detail of which I was following closely by telephone reports.

In striking contrast, since the beginning of the battle the German Supreme Command had left its army commanders to conduct their own battles.

The German commanders soon began to feel that the game was hopelessly lost. On the fourth day of the great battle they began the great retreat to save their armies. On the evening of September 8 Lieutenant Colonel Hentsch sent for the second time by Von Moltke to the various army headquarters, reached Von Bulow at Montmort, southwest of Epernay.

Hentsch had full powers to give orders in the name of the German general staff. General Von Bulow gloomily pictured the situation to him. His army was exhausted by its efforts, its effectiveness was dangerously reduced by heavy losses. The movement of Von Kluck's army in the direction of the
